Lanterns were placed on almost every main street and residents were asked to light their windows with candles and oil lamps. The idea was to prevent lawbreakers from dodging the police or hiding in dark alleys, therefore reducing the crime rate. From here on, the city gained the nickname La Ville-Lumi\u00e8re ("The City of Light").

Light needs a certain amount of time to travel from the pinhole to the image plane. During this time, the camera continues to move. Figure 7 illustrates that the motion of the camera further shortens the distance that light has to travel to the image plane. It therefore further reduces the size of the image.
